Golden Jubilarians

Mr. and Mrs. Frank M. Walsh, of Smith St., Centereach, who were feted recently on their golden wedding jubilee with a well-attended celebration at Felice's of Patchogue. Those present at the gathering included the couple's four children, Mrs. Henry Steinmann, Mrs. John Moller, Frank M. Walsh Jr. and George M. Walsh, all of Centereach, and the jubilarians' 13 grandchildren.

School Opens Next Wed'y.

Bathing suits, baseballs and balmy vacation days are being put aside for readin', 'riting and 'rithmetic for the 11,000 school-aged youngsters of Patchogue and Medford. The ringing of school bells next Wednesday, Sept. 8th will signal a return to the books and the rigor of study.

Teachers becoming part of the Patchogue-Medford faculty for the first time spent yesterday and today at their assigned schools working with building administrators and veteran staff members for orientation to the district's educational program.

On Tuesday, Sept. 7th, the entire staff reports. Beginning at 8:00 A.M. academic department chairmen will be holding special meetings throughout the school district. Later in the morning

Reese Hails Traffic Plan

The Patchogue Village Board recently instituted a new plan for improved traffic flow on North Ocean Avenue at the intersections of Oak and Lake Streets.

North Ocean Avenue now has two lanes of southbound traffic from North of Lake Street to Main Street. The westerly lane allows cars to have a smooth flow to Main Street without blockage by cars waiting to make left turns into Oak Street. The center southbound lane is reserved for cars waiting to make the left turn.

Northbound traffic looking to turn left into Lake Street will benefit from a newly installed full stop sign on the N.W. corner of Lake Street and North Ocean Avenue intersection. This sign stops the southbound traffic momentarily at Lake Street facilitating the left turn.

In order to put this plan into effect, Mayor James Reese and the Village Board had to authorize removal of parking

Town Wetlands Law Adopted

The Brookhaven Town Board adopted a tidal and fresh-water wetlands protection law following a public hearing Monday at which it was recommended that more comprehensive action be taken to protect the town's natural resources.

The hearing was part of a special meeting called to enact the legislation before Wed-

Foundations Erased, More To Go

In the first of what is expected to be a long series of such actions in Brookhaven Town, four abandoned open foundations in a Holtsville subdivision were filled in last Thursday.

The "long series" forecast was made by Town Chief Building Inspector Albert Carnes, who said there are many similar conditions in the town that will be brought to the Town Board's attention.

The four foundations that were bulldozed out of existence Thursday, all in a subdivision west of Washington Avenue, had been the subject of many complaints over the past two years by nearby residents, but their appeals had been ignored until Supervisor John Randolph, Democrat, took office this year. The foundations were described as "attractive nuisances."

The Holtsville development involved is one of more than 50 in Brookhaven whose performance bonds have been declared in default.

Besides filling in the foundations, the town built retaining walls to shore up several lawns that had been undermined by the Holtsville developer in cutting new roads.

All of the work will be charged against the developer's performance bond, according to Town Councilman Joel Lefkowitz who, together with Town Councilwoman Regina Seltzer, observed the filling-in operations.

Wetlands

nesday, the deadline prescribed by state law for town and village governments to take action. Otherwise, the county would have had 90 days to assume jurisdiction over the wetlands.

Most of the hearing was devoted to a presentation by Patchogue attorney Victor Yannacone Jr. He commended the proposed law, saying it would protect two of Brookhaven's existing six major ecological systems.

To illustrate the systems, Yannacone presented the board with a set of six paintings by Dennis Puleston, Brookhaven Village naturalist. Besides salt-water and fresh-water marshes, the paintings portray deciduous woods, salt bays, fields and developed areas and their relation to the food supply.

Yannacone had used the paintings as exhibits in a 1966 Suffolk Supreme Court case in which he represented his wife, Carol, a suit that eventually culminated in the nationwide ban on DDT.

Yannacone urged the board to consider an environmental protection act paralleling that adopted by Huntington Town in 1971, a document that he drafted.

The six ecosystems, Yannacone told the board, "still exist in Brookhaven in a form suitable for protection, and all six are under your jurisdiction. It is not just a matter of protecting the fresh-water and salt-water marshlands, but also everything related to them."

Supervisor John F. Randolph called the action by the Board, "highly significant and a crucial first step towards the compilation of an effective and innovative policy by the Town to protect our environment. The decision today will further enhance our efforts to retain local control over land development."

Town Attorney Walter Beck explained at the hearing, that the Wetlands Law would regulate and provide controls over activities including drainage, dredging, excavation, dumping or filling of areas in Brookhaven designated as fresh water wetlands. It would also require a permit to be obtained by any person in the Town wishing to conduct a regulated activity upon any tidal or fresh water wetland.

"This local law takes on added meaning when you consider that the State recently enacted legislation to protect the banks of the Carman's River from despoilment. It is important that we begin to formulate actions now that will protect our fragile and invaluable environmental resources for the future.'," Randolph said. He also reiterated his support for the creation of the Department of the Environment which would have among its future responsibilities, the administration of the Fresh Water and Tidal Wetlands Law.

In other action at the meeting, the Supervisor designated September as Safety Month, particularly highlighting bicycle safety programs for school children.

The Board also changed upcoming meeting dates because of schedule conflicts, setting Monday evening, September 20th at 8:00 p.m. as the second Town Board meeting for that month, and designated November 9th and November 23rd at 10:00 a.m. and 8:00 p.m. respectively as future meeting dates.

The Board authorized Randolph to apply for $30,000 in Federal funds under the Title V provision of the Older Americans Act to undertake renovations and repairs at the Blue Point Senior Citizens' Cottage.

Progress Report On Housing Code

A great deal apparently is being accomplished as the result of Patchogue's new Housing Code, according to a report issued by Housing Inspector Bernard W. Benkenstein covering the administration of the regulations since taking effect six months ago.

In the period from Mar. 1 to Aug. 31, Benkenstein said, there have been 99 dwelling units inspected, 58 rooming units inspected, 65 complaints investigated, 966 violations issued, 390 violations complied with, 49 prosecutions started and 138 compliance visits made.
